Undines: Lessons from the Realm of the Water Spirits
and

Mermaids, Sylphs, Gnomes, and Salamanders

I think my number one contribution is teaching people simple methods for dissolving negativity. This begins with people in your personal life. If you can succeed in that area you are then certified to work with anyone on earth.

I have two versions of this practice in book form—The Perfection of Wisdom is more a straight magical practice in the first link below. And the second link, How to Speak Saturn emphasizes more the political applications of this approach.

<http://www.williamrmistele.com/uploads/howtospeaksaturn.pdf>

But those are rather technical. It helps to have someone go over these things with you. Some people pick it up right away and others find it is completely beyond them.

It uses the fifth element of akasha so that in practice you surround yourself with akasha when you are with someone or else you can meditate on someone being in akasha. As a method it does seem to have immediate applications. It makes angry people for example calm and reasonable. As a practice, you can easily spend a life time on it.

But I don't think this method would be very interesting to anyone on a radio show.

My second concern or message is about technology. Put simply, the accelerate of technology is so great that there is a six to fifty year lag between when a technology is applied after being invented and the time frame in which the consequences of that technology are understood.

My mother watched the Wright Brothers at Kitty Hawk. We have the Voyager leaving the solar system and machines roving around on the sand of other planets.

Or a more serious problem with this time lag issue: In 1932 the atom was split. In 1943 there were only microscopic amounts of Plutonium and Uranium 225. Three years later two cities were destroyed with atomic bombs. It took another twenty years to realize that radiation was not good and that a full scale nuclear exchange would create a nuclear winter.

Now we have cooling pools like the one in reactor #5 in Fukushima, Japan where the pumps are not running. Every five hours the pool heats up one degree. By next week if they don't get their pumps running again the lack of cooling water could trigger a nuclear reaction.

There are cooling pools all over the U.S. If the electricity goes out in the power grid within three days to a week you have all of them setting off nuclear reactions. It is much worse than a hydrogen bomb. Those cooling pools sometimes contain ten or more retired nuclear cores. Also the only underground storage for nuclear material is in New Mexico and it has had to be closed because it is too radioactive inside for anyone to enter.

These are examples of technology—corporations and governments apply technology without knowing how to clean up the mess it makes when they malfunction. And no corporation or government can pay for the damages that these mega disasters can create.

If I talk to a CEO of a global corporation who has a Master's degree in business from Harvard about this problem with technology, he understands what I am saying but feels no responsibility to do anything. The old Adam's Smith model of economics is still the operating system in the minds of business leaders—namely, putting the needs of my corporation first is good for everybody. And look at all the marvelous technology and goods and services we now have due to that approach.

Other examples are the entire electrical grid of the planet would go down if we get hit by a solar flare like the one that hit the earth in 1859 that burnt people's fingers running telegraph machines. It only takes a few billion dollars to harden the U.S. electrical grid but Congress lacks the will to do this.

Fracking, which very likely causes earthquakes, is going on within a few hundred miles of Yellowstone's super volcano. The human race has never lived through a super volcano.

Technology in the hands of rogue states or terrorists such as an EMP weapon, various kinds of manmade pandemics, problems with GMOs, ways airplanes can be used to create massive devastation which the TSA is totally falling to address, etc.

But again, I don't think these issues fit your audience.

What is more relevant in terms of spiritual issues is my “spiritual anthropology” and the modern fairy tales I write about mermaids and other elemental beings. Mermaids fill in for what is missing from the human conscience. And that is the elemental astral water element which they embody.

As I interview and study women who have the souls of mermaids inside of them, there are some straight forward abilities they possess that we could all learn. These are

1. Mermaid empathy. These women feel what others’ feel beyond what is normal for human beings. But their empathy is not just with the present person in front of them. Four of the mermaids I interview can relive other individual’s past memories as if they have experienced what the other person experienced in every detail.

And they also sense the future—the person you are meant to be or at least one of the best outcomes that you can attain in the near future. This means they see you as what you would be once you have overcome your weaknesses and difficulties. They talk not as if they are having a vision of the future. They can talk as if they are right now in the future and reporting back to you in the present what they see now that you will you be. It is a very persuasive approach.

2. The mermaids have what I call astral immortality. Human beings have five elements in their souls—earth, air, fire, water, and akasha. But these elements are reset each time we incarnate so that our personalities are shaped by our natal charts. Mermaids usually have just the one element of water. They tell me they are the same person when they incarnate over and over. They just learn new things.

Unlike human beings, mermaids draw energy directly from water to renew themselves and to use to heal others. Water is a source of energy for them in addition to breathing air and eating food.

Consequently, mermaid women emit watery astral energy which tends to have an effect on anyone near to them almost like a drug. It purifies others, puts them in contact with nature, and makes others feel at least twice as alive.

3. The Australian Aborigines have what they dreamtime. Dreamtime is an inner psychic landscape of the soul belonging to a group of people. It is composed of their myths, what they feel is sacred, and their spiritual outlook and ideals. A people tend to associate with their own dreamtime on the astral plane after they have departed.

In other words, the different tribes for example the Sioux, the Hopi, the Yaqui and so forth have separate dreamtimes that do not communicate with each other. The Christians, Wiccans, Buddhists, Taoists, Hindus, Muslims, Jews, etc. also have separate dreamtimes that do not communicate with each other.

However, when viewing the kings and queens of the four elements we find spirits that embody global dreamtime. As elementals, they exist on the astral plane but have a close associating with physical nature. But these are not like the fairies of specific people's such as the fay of the Celts or the jinn of the Sufis. The elemental kings and queens possess the siddhis and powers that enable them to oversee and maintain the entire biosphere.

There are air spirits or sylphs that can bring on or delay ices ages. There are salamanders or fire spirits that can control volcanic eruptions and the movement of tectonic plates. The gnome kings could teach human beings to extend their lives by centuries and the mermaid queens effortlessly can unite their souls with anyone on earth.

In other words, from my experience in studying the aura of different people, even those from other solar systems do not embody such powers as these. As far as I have observed, advanced civilizations in other solar systems may terraform planets with their technologies but they do not terriform planes with their magical powers.

At the same time it appears from my observations that the entire realm of mermaids has been keep hidden from the human race. I run into individuals who recall their lives in Atlantis and I have a few observations about Atlantis. One of the mermaid women told me a story about her experience in Atlantis for example which I put in the book I am working on called Mermaid Tales. See

<http://www.williammiste.com/mermaidtales.pdf>

I also explore in a screenplay various issues concerning Atlantis. It is hard to say if I am not doing exactly what Plato was doing when he described Atlantis—he was laying the framework not of the past but of the future in which he envisioned the Greek city states becoming united. I envision a world in which individuals who possess some magical abilities and also a will of steel will intervene and assist in preventing the kind of human made mega disasters that corporations and governments are prone to producing.

Such individuals would compose a Council of Elders like what I describe in my screenplay. But it is a spiritual council. They do not meet. There is no lodge or community they are a part of. What they share in common is a commitment to assisting the human race in its evolution and in protecting the earth. The members of a Council of Elders for karmic reason have to actually be in incarnation to make any difference in this world. Spirits or masters on the inner planes lack the authority and often the motivation to intervene directly in world affairs.

The Five Elements of Human Nature

Mermaids embody the part of human nature that has been hidden from us. By learning the language of mermaids, we encounter for the first time different kinds of love the human race has never imagined.

In some traditions, human nature is composed of five elements--earth, air, fire, water, and akasha. The air element heightens artistic sensitivity and mental clarity. The fire element enhances will power, courage, and enthusiasm. The earth element keeps us practical, down to earth, and it motivates us to build things of value that endure. The water element enhances feeling and love. And the fifth element of akasha oversees the development and balance between the other four.

In human civilization and history, we already know fire, air, and earth. We have individuals like General Patton who look around in life and ask themselves, What is the one problem no one else can solve? And then they place themselves in a position where the power they acquire can solve those problems. And we have men like Westinghouse, Edison, Oppenheimer, and Nobel who offer mankind new discoveries and applications of fire and electricity. These individuals act as if they are fire spirits in human form.

Fire--will and power--are very well known to human beings. Fire is a part of everything we do. Electricity is one of the cornerstones of our civilization.

We also know the air element. We have Shakespeare, Mozart, Sir Isaac Newton, Steven Hawking, and others in human history. They possess a detachment, artistic sensitivity, and also clarity of mind that enables them to study life, not for the sake of power, but for beauty, art, and understanding.

And we have the earth element--we have men like Warren Buffett that build empires because they enjoy work and making things of value that endure. These individuals involve themselves with the more material side of life. They often investigate geology, DNA, chemistry, and ways to take natural processes and perfect them.

But we are missing individuals who embody the primal force of the water element. These individuals would not be known for their power, their detachment and clarity of mind, or for the way they like to build and leave a legacy behind.

Instead, these women would be extremely empathic and pure in love. If you placed just one of them at a negotiating table where Arabs and Israelis were trying to fashion a peace treaty, she could dissolve the hostility and attachment to the past of those present and inspire them to create peace.

If you took just one of these women and placed her on the UN Security Council, no one would be able to lie anymore. She could read everyone's mind and not only that. She could relive the exact memories of those present as if those memories were her own.

And if you put her on the board of directors of Monsanto, BP, or Tokyo Electric, she would hold her own conference meetings at night with the board members and CEO while they all slept and dreamed. And when they awoke in the morning, they would sometimes be in a cold sweat. Because she would have showed them in graphic living detail the future horrors that result from the choices they are making. And they would remember the words she spoke to them while they slept.

But you see, such women have never appeared openly in human history. They have had to always disguise themselves in order to survive among us. And until now it is almost certain that the divine world has considered the human race too immature to know about their presence lest we end up abusing them. But this has changed because the world is passing through a critical stage.

In learning to speak mermaid, we are going to acquire the missing piece in the puzzle of what it is to be a human being. We are going to encounter a love that will vanquish the isolation and loneliness that has haunted the human soul down through the many ages and eons of time.

Top Ten Things Mermaids Can Teach Mankind

10. Graphic Imagination: Mermaid women can sense directly if something feels good or not, right or wrong, and how a project or plan will work out. They can do this without relying on thinking to evaluate, guess, or estimate. Even ideas and plans have vibrations that resonate on multiple planes. They read these vibrations.

When they think about the future, they perceive themselves inside of the future rather than approaching it through abstract concepts or comparisons to things with which they are already familiar.

Part of what is occurring with these women is that their brain waves are actually the same vibration as water in nature. They are not separated from the thing they are thinking about. They are connected to it the way water can respond to every situation in a new and unique way rather than using categories or past results to determine how to respond to what is in front of them.

9. Overcoming linear time—mermaid women experience memories of the past and visions of the future as if they are equally real. They can relive the past and live moments in the future with a sense of reality that others ascribe to the present moment.

Serena, a world champion surfer, points out that when surfers are in the barrel--the curling wave on all sides of them—they experience a stillness in which time stops. Advanced surfers value and seek this experience. But mermaid women often in any moment are in a state of stillness. Talking to them you can sense that time has stopped, connection to the rest of the world is suspended, and all that exists in her awareness of your presence.

Or as the girl in the story said, “For me, there is no ‘I was’ or ‘I will be.’ There is only ‘I am.’” But she can say this because she literally experiences the past and the future of other people with the same degree of detail and emotional intensity that they themselves have experienced.

Or, put another way, on the open ocean there is no time—a billion years can go by and the sea remains the same with barely any noticeable change.

8. Empathy—to feel what others’ feel. Mermaid women do this spontaneously and feel what anyone around them is feeling. Her empathy extends to the past and to the present. Yet her empathy can also extend into the future. In mermaid empathy, the mermaid women may speak to you from within the future—not a vision or a dream—but time is suspended and she is witness to what you will one day be. So when she offers you reassurance about who you will become she does it through observing your future from a first person point of view.

7. A Sea of Love. The essence of being mermaid is to feel immersed in a sea of love that encompasses the planet and that in every moment you are flowing this love through you to others.

How on earth do you teach to human beings this non-thinking, concept-free state of awareness that is totally in the moment without mental effort being exerted? There is no “mindfulness” training occurring here, no thinking, and it involves no effort of will.

If you observe first-hand what these women do and then observe those among the human race who calls themselves masters you realize the humans are still without understanding of this aspect of the water element in nature.

You can observe this for yourself. In a mermaid woman’s presence, it is like she is a stream and you are gravity—every single move she makes is shaped by your presence.

Some individuals try to use the mermaid woman herself to support their own ego, for being with her often makes others feel twice as alive as they normally are or, in effect, they feel half dead when they are no longer around her.

One man said to one of the mermaid women—“After having had a relationship with you, I can never be with another woman.” And that was ten years ago and he still has not recovered.

But you see, he fails to understand—a mermaid woman on earth is a teacher to mankind. To connect to her is virtually identical with connecting to the sea, an arctic bay, a stream, or waterfall or lake frozen solid in winter. She is nature itself in human form.

The man might try, then, to get past his own ego and realize he is not in a relationship to a woman who he can possess or bond with, but rather she embodies a wonder and sacredness not known in human religions and wisdom traditions.

6. Astral Immortality. When one of the four elements becomes a part of you so that you have the same vibration of that element in nature you attain astral immortality--at any age or in any future life your astral body does not deteriorate. Your inner connection to nature renews and recharges your energy.

When an individual reincarnates, he or she has the wisdom and energy of the specific element. This embodiment of the element is so strong that the signs of the Zodiac in the individual's natal chart usually do not shape, reduce, or modify it. These people have transcended astrology and psychology.

For the element of water, the individual's astral body remains forever new, young, innocent, vivacious, purifying, self-renewing, and life giving. When this individual relaxes, the aura has the vibration of nature such as a waterfall, a mountain pool, a stream, a lake, a wave breaking on a beach, an arctic bay, or an entire sea.

Within a woman's soul is the one ocean that gave birth to life on earth; the stream that brings life to whatever is by its side and that can dream others dreams effortlessly without loss to herself; the waterfall that knows how to let go and embrace the air without fear; the lake that reflects from its face the beauty of the universe; and the wave that always is in sync, always rhythmic, always a part of so much more than this world that we see.

For one woman, it is like the stillness of the sun blazing in clear ice--the present moment shines brighter and more full of beauty than anything else the mind can think of or contemplate in life.

For another, she is totally in the moment and receptive. She is beyond the capacity to even think a mean thought ever; and she radiates watery vitality more than any master or guru on earth. In this sense, these individuals are more alive than other human beings.

As one woman says, nature is embedded in my very core. To be in their presence is to feel like you are out in nature. Again, the very touch of their aura on you tends to vitalize you and make you feel twice as alive as you are without being around her.

5. Rejuvenation. I said to Serena, you are not a day over 25. She is 39. She has no desire to hide her age. Again, when you develop your astral body so it is a direct embodiment of some aspect of nature, your energy is continuously being exchanged and recharged through contact with that element in nature.

I asked Serena if anyone has ever asked her, “Can you teach me how to create in myself the sense of peace and feeling fully alive that you get whenever you swim in the ocean?” And she replied, “No, one has asked me that, though a few have told me to go swim in the ocean and recharge myself when they see that I am worn out or tired.”

Then I asked her, “If someone were to ask you that question and they were sensitive to energy so they could observe the way your aura changes when you are in water, could you show them how you do what you do?”

She asked me in reply how it is she came to embody a mermaid’s aura and I said I would meditate on her past lives to see when she became what she is now. Some people live with a close connection to nature and fall in love with its beauty and in so doing they unite with nature from within. This gives them an internal well-being that no wisdom tradition on earth has learned how to teach.

Serena, as a pro surfer who has surfed waves all over the world, says that every wave pattern, every water location, and with every difference in temperature the water has its own unique energy vibration which she can perceive.

I ask you, if you put a mermaid, which is a spirit and also an elemental being composed of water, inside of a woman's body, would she not say exactly what Serena had just said about water?

4. Sending healing energy of the sea to others. Serena initially emailed me because she wanted to know how to give back to the ocean in response to all it has given her. Because mermaid women feel watery healing energy flowing through them continuously, they are often compulsive about giving in return to others what is being given so freely to them. This is not the kind of bright white light healing that western magicians are sometimes taught to send. Rather, this is the healing energy within water itself. Some of the mermaid women perceive this energy as a mist they can see flowing above the surface of the ocean.

3. Free of fear of death—These women almost all say that they have no fear of death. It is not a belief, idea, or doctrine in their minds but a gut response. In effect, they have no need of religion or beliefs since they sense directly they are a “part of so much more than this world that we see.”

This also derives from the fact that many of them have had many experience of being outside of their bodies and experiencing states of profound bliss. Serena, as well as others, tell me of times when they were told to get back in their body. Serena tried to refuse. She said her body was like wet sack of potatoes compared to her state of freedom she was experiencing on the astral plane. But the voice prevailed. It said she had things still to accomplish on earth.

2. They perceive love through direct observation of the energy being exchanged between individuals. There are no special moments as in the kind of bonding that occurs in human romance. For them, every moment is equally special.

They are aware also that sex has nothing to with love—they are innocent beyond human understanding in that they give all of themselves in very moment to whoever they are with and they are free of all attachment to another since they feel complete in themselves.

So, unless imprinted at a young age with someone else's will power, they do not get jealous or angry as do human beings. They simply do not seek external or social validation to confirm their sense of self-worth. They are a part of nature such that what occurs in human society has little influence on them—"Events in the external world do not change who I am inside."

1. Reinstatement of the Human Conscience. Without the four elements operating equally, the human conscience is in defective. It is dysfunctional and simply does not operate with any effectiveness. The fire element is will and power; the earth element is inner silence and working to make something real; the air element is knowledge, harmony, wisdom, and artistic sensitivity.

But the elemental water vibration is almost totally absent from human religion, culture, society, and consciousness. The water element is all of the previous points one through nine. Without these abilities, the human race will increasingly engage in risk taking experiments that threaten its own existence. When CEOs, scientists, and governments plan for the future, they do not perceive their goals from the point of view of love and an all-embracing, nurturing sensitivity.

Empathy is not taught in any university on earth with any degree of depth or power. Astral immortality—being united to nature from within—is almost never mentioned in any religion on earth.

The one energy field of love that encompasses this planet which every mermaid woman is united to is totally outside of the wisdom and experience of any tradition on earth. These traditions may talk about it conceptually or as a religions ideal or try to describe it using words. But the actual perception of it and being one with it has not yet entered human consciousness.

These things that mermaids do are not superhuman. Mermaid women are operating at a normal level of awareness with the water element in their auras. It is we--the rest of humanity—who are critically deficient in awareness of the water element in nature.

But things have changed. Mermaid women--the real ones--are no longer disguising themselves from the human race as they have done so effectively for ages when they have walked among us in human form. They are now meeting in groups--meeting others like themselves for the first time. This has never occurred before in the history of this planet in groups of this size.

Perhaps they will agree when they meet to offer seminars for others who wish to be “initiated” into the mysteries of love that water on earth has always embodied in the sea, the stream, the rain, the waterfall, the mountain pool, the wave breaking on the beach, the cloud, the mist, the lake, etc. Surely there are human beings who are ready to meet and learn from nature embodied in human form.
